Identification of the aspartate binding site of Escherichia coli DNA polymerase I by site-directed mutagenesis. Escherichia coli DNA polymerase I (Pol I) belongs to the Y-family of DNA polymerases and is composed of four subunits: alpha, beta, delta, and epsilon. Recently, using site-directed mutagenesis, we showed that substitution of tyrosine 306 of the alpha subunit of Pol I with cysteine did not affect the catalytic activity, but greatly reduced the affinity for ssDNA. In the present study, to identify the amino acid residue that binds to the 3'-OH group of the incoming deoxynucleotide, we substituted the amino acids in the region that form a "pocket" for the substrate nucleotides in the dNTP-binding site of the alpha subunit by site-directed mutagenesis. Upon tryptophan or phenylalanine substitution at residue 337 in the alpha subunit, the affinity for dAMP, dATP, or dGTP was diminished to half the value of wild-type Pol I. Substitution of asparagine, phenylalanine, or tyrosine for residue 333 in the beta subunit did not alter the affinity for nucleotides. To confirm the importance of these amino acid residues in the alpha subunit, we constructed two mutant proteins, alpha Cys306 and alpha Trp337, in which either cysteine 306 or tryptophan 337 was replaced by alanine. alpha Cys306 exhibited almost no affinity for the nucleotides, while alpha Trp337 had an affinity for dAMP that was almost as high as wild-type Pol I. These results indicate that the amino acid residues corresponding to residue 337 of the alpha subunit in the wild-type Pol I are critical for the specificity of dAMP binding.

The head of an independent organization that administers the city's grid-priority roadways -- or what's known as "green" or "slow" lanes -- said his staff has been inundated with calls and emails from irate drivers who are upset about the system. "We are hearing more from the public than we have in the last few months," said Mayor Dave Bonikowski. The system, which he called the brainchild of his predecessor, Bob LaPlante, has given priority to drivers who can prove a medical reason for their infrequent trips. "It's our biggest, most visible project," Bonikowski said. The city has temporarily stopped expanding the system, which has resulted in hundreds of thousands of dollars in lost revenue, he said. But, he said the system's future -- and the city's future, in terms of traffic safety -- is no longer in doubt. "We just have too many cars and not enough people to drive them," Bonikowski said. Andrew Desjardins, of Lincoln, said he is frustrated and angry that a system he believes he has no say in is impacting him and his family. He said his wife has been on the low-priority list for more than a year and only got approval for a restricted license last week. "The system of low-priority/high-cost is taking its toll," Desjardins said in an email to the mayor. "That toll has nothing to do with high-occupancy vehicle lanes, but I think it has a lot to do with what 'high-occupancy vehicle lanes' look like." Gary Harwood, who was on the low-priority list for a year and a half, said the system is benefiting those who don't need it. He would like to see the city redesign the low-priority lanes to meet federal guidelines and provide an opportunity for all drivers to use the lane if they need to. "I'm doing all I can to be patient," he said. The city has received $1.6 million from the national U.S. Department of Transportation to help pay for the lane, and it is set to receive a similar amount to complete the project. Also at issue is whether the lanes should be called "low-priority" lanes or "exemption" lanes. Some drivers who were on the low-priority list, including Harwood, said they have noticed an uptick
